Each year I welcome the opportunity to offer remarks in the Yearbook. Few other publications retained from your college days will probably become more valued than this attempt to capture the spirit of that period in your life.

A Yearbook is, and should remain, a way to bring into focus all the events and activities that shaped your memories of San Diego State. Long after the detailed information of text and lecture notes have become replaced by the more immediate concerns of career, family, and community responsibilities, the photos and quotations within these pages will allow you a well deserved moment to reflect upon how richly appointed your life has become as a result of these many changes.

I encourage you to look upon each new chapter of your life as the most exciting. No era, be it your college days or any other singular interest, will afford you the complete experience that living with an eye toward tomorrow permits. Each of you are entering into the mainstream of a world characterized as hopelessly doomed by some and ripe with new horizons by others. In the final analysis only your continued desire to use the tools of learning already made available to you can be of assistance. You have labored long and hard to begin this quest; never be willing to do less or settle for less as your journey progresses.

I am grateful that among the many commitments each of you assume during your stay at the University, some are willing to go a step further and bring all of us the joy we find within the Yearbook. I wish to offer a special thank you to the members of Circle K and their advisors for again accepting this task, and to compliment them on a job very well done.

Best wishes in the years ahead.

Losing seasons in sports are often made more palatable by saying, ‘At least we have nowhere to go but up.’ Coach David ‘Smokey’ Gaines’ men’s basketball squad supported that cliche this year, rebounding from last place and a 6-21 overall record in 1980 to finish the 1980-81 season with a 15-12 mark, good for fifth place in the Western Athletic Conference.

Recruiting was the reason for the reversal of form in 1981. Gaines brought in new players from all across the country in his second year as head coach. Two of the new players, Zack Jones and Michael Cage, started every game of the season. Jones, a junior guard from Washington, D.C., led the team in scoring, averaging 17.1 points per game. Cage, a freshman from West Memphis, Arkansas, was among the nation’s leaders in rebounding, pulling down an average of 13.1 per game. Both Jones and Cage have received honorable mentions on the All-WAC Team.

Returning starters Tony Gwynn, Eddie Morris, and Eddy Gordon combined with Jones and Cage gave the Aztecs a solid foundation in 1981. Gwynn, a senior, finished his fine four-year career here by being selected to the All-WAC second team for the second year in a row. Gwynn will hand over the point guard responsibilities to Keith Smith, a transfer student from University of Michigan.

Graduating seniors on this year’s team were Gwynn, forward Marcus Hamilton, center Drew Head, and guards Joe Mendoza and Mark Smith.

The Malcolm A. Love Library is conveniently located in the center of San Diego State University campus. The library was constructed in 1971, named after Malcolm A. Love, under whose presidency from 1952-1971 San Diego State University’s enrollment increased phenomenally. The Library was established to further the educational process by providing a total of 727,730 books and periodicals for use by students. Resources include microfiche and micropaque cards, microfiche reels, college catalogs, scientific reports, and phonograph records. The Library provides all United Nations and Organizations of American States publications in addition to other national and international publications.

Malcolm A. Love Library staff tours each semester to assist students in the use of the many facilities offered by the library. With present enrollment at San Diego State University, reaching 33,000, the library is now utilized more frequently than ever before.

Hepner Hall — Handy Tower

Walter R. Hepner Hall is a beautiful, Spanish style building complex near the center of campus. Bordered on the north by Handy Tower, this “L” shaped complex runs south to the President’s wing of the Administration Building and then west to the Little Theater and Speech Arts Building.

Hepner Hall is constructed of adobe and wood and is roofed in Spanish tile. It houses one of the largest classrooms on campus, which is capable of holding 150 students. Basic science classes often fill the room to capacity.

Hepner Hall was built by Franklin D. Roosevelt’s Work Projects Administration in 1940, and was named after a former President of San Diego State College.

There are two landmarks housed in this hall. The mission style bells, which are often considered a symbol of San Diego State University, sit atop Hepner Hall facing the south end of campus. Monty Munoz, the university’s mascot, sits on the lawn inside the “L” shaped quad.

The present area of Hepner Hall has always provided students with a place to relax and socialize.
Just one of the many reflections that some students had a very real life image of.

Looking South from the second story of Hepner Hall provided a beautiful panoramic view of San Diego State University. To the left is Malcolm A. Love Library, and to the right is the Performing Arts Building.
"Sorry Guy, but I just couldn't avoid hitting you. I was busy looking elsewhere."

A scene pretty easy to find was in any hallway on Fridays, usually after 3:00 P.M. San Diego State University would then turn into "Ghost Town State University."
Usually on Fridays, the typical scene could be like this near Monty's Den, where San Diego State presented the Friday Afternoon Concerts.
The "Lookout Tower" at the steps to the Commons Dining Hall was more than just a treat for some of the onlookers.
S.D.S.U.'s Greek Ampitheatre is well known for its fantastic concerts under the stars, where many students could also be found studying during the peace and quiet.

During breaks, between classes, and even during classes, many students found the game of Backgammon to be very competitive as well as relaxing.
It was around Halloween when it looked like some people just couldn't get it together. Better luck next year!
A student spends a few minutes to meet with a long lost friend...some students do get lost in a crowd of 33,000+.

Monty's Den has been that great hangout for after class social hours, for a short one. It was in the late '70's when San Diego State allowed beer on the campus at Monty's Den.

The Aztec Book Store was seen very calm and not nearly as crowded, once the semester got under way with all of the classes scheduled.
These three domes could be found on top of the Physical Science Building. They are the University’s telescopes for the lab class and viewing in astronomy.
The Daily Aztec office kept busy throughout the year to supply us with the news on and off campus. Daily, many thousands of copies of the paper went through the students hands.

Intersection House and the Lutheran Campus Center became widely known this year as they co-sponsored a series of "Whole Being" weekends and "Jungian" weekends in the Julian mountains. Also popular were Tuesday and Wednesday suppers. The Center for Appropriate Technology is an impressive energy education project in which many San Diego State University students and faculty are participating.

Both the food and the conversation are nourishing at the weekly Tuesday supper at Intersection House.

The Waterski Association is an on campus organization designed to promote waterskiing at all levels of ability. The club skis weekly in Mission Bay, but the devoted members will be found on weekend trips to the Colorado River. Although waterskiing is its main focal point, such diverse activities include booze cruises, over-the-line, sunset barbecues, and general F.U.B.A.R. Parties.

"THE SUNSET"

Beyond the trees, there lies the sea.
Above the sea, behold; the sun!
The path was short to my favorite fort,
A hut composed of palms.

The clouds were quite thin,
as the waves rolled in,
The last rays of the day
were upon me.
How divine to recline, on this beach so fine.
With Mother Nature here to surround me.

My thoughts were sincere,
As the sun made it clear,
The time was just right for a new, and venturesome night.
The horizon was bright, a red and orange delight.
Oh, what a memorable sight!

Beyond the sea, darkness was free,
Above the sea, behold;
the stars!
The path is short, from this particular spot.
But the moon leads the way to my secret hide away.
